A unique training scheme organised by the British Guild of Agricultural Journalists and sponsored by John Deere Limited.

This two-part course is aimed primarily at graduating students, recent graduates or existing journalists with less than 12 months experience, resident in the UK, who are interested in a career in agricultural journalism.

Two days of lectures at John Deere's headquarters at Langar, near Nottingham (with two nights' accommodation provided), will be followed by three days' practical work experience with a specialist magazine, newspaper or public relations agency.

At the end of the course, each student must write a news story for the journal of their choice. A special judging panel will award a £250 cheque and the handsome John Deere trophy to the winner.
