About the Guild

The British Guild of Agricultural Journalists is a community of editors and journalists, broadcasters, photographers and PR/marketing specialists working in agriculture, commercial horticulture and other rural industries throughout Great Britain. Members work freelance and full time on specialist trade publications and regional newspapers, run their own agencies, or are employed by commercial businesses, agencies and other organisations in the rural sector.

Membership of the Guild provides a route to many opportunities: press facility trips to many countries around the World through the Guild's international connections; prestigious national and international journalism and photography awards; low-cost training workshops for professional development; social events for networking; notification of journalism and communications jobs in the rural sector; regular news of people, publications and agencies involved in food and farming through the Guild website and monthly eAlert newsletters.
